Investigation in Single Document Summarization

L.R Hariharan and L.Radika

Abstract - Literature reported that due to the rapid growth of the internet and online information services , huge information is ready made available online . There is no time for any body to read everything but critical decisions are required to be made quickly . This has led to large scale research efforts in text summarization . This paper combines contributions by Term Frequency Weight , position weight and commendation weight to form an effective extraction based summary . We have analyzed the significance of each feature and we found that a combination of all three weights results in a better summary as close as human generated summary . We also show that our summarizer outperforms commercially available summarizers like Copernic summarizer and Microsoft summarizer .
